Eye On | Retail 2020
A guide to engaging retail shoppers this holiday season.
This holiday season...

There will be an unprecedented amount of first-time online shoppers, along with seasoned digital buyers, browsing, searching, and purchasing gifts, holiday essentials, and everyday items. With the increase in online purchase activity, brands may need to take a fresh approach to holiday campaign planning by activating more refined audience segmentation strategies to engage with the right desired customers.
Despite the restrictions...
Consumers are expected to generate $3.914 trillion in ecommerce sales this year with most countries expected to experience strong growth.

Retail Ecommerce Sales (by region, 2020, billions)

- EUROPE: $498.32 Billion
- AMERICAS: $749 Billion
- ASIA-PACIFIC: $2,448.23 Billion

In 2020 Gen X and Boomers dominate global mobile and ecommerce growth: over 80% of Gen X and Boomers shopping online.

In difficult times, self-gifting and seasonal shopping can be positive outlets: 74% of global Christmas shoppers say they research gifts for themselves.

In 2020, consumers are losing interest in traditional holiday sales periods: with 64% of consumers less inclined to shop on Black Friday and almost 60% losing interest in shopping on Cyber Monday, retailers are planning on extending sales periods throughout the entire holiday season.

Consumer loyalty is based on brand values and purpose: 47% of internet users surveyed this year say they’ve switched to a different product or service because a company has violated their personal values.

To engage with the right consumers... retailers may need to adapt their seasonal marketing strategies to reflect new buying behaviors and attitudes.
This holiday season, brands should consider a data-driven approach to engagement by investing in audience profiles built with diverse consumer attitudes, personas and behaviors.

Household demographic traits, survey-based attitudes and beliefs, past-purchase spending, location-proximity signals and more, can help brands to gain a more holistic understanding of their target customers to strengthen engagement on digital display, mobile and social channels.
